Akin Gump published a client alert on the “White Paper” published by the European Commission; the White Paper contains proposals for the regulation of Artificial Intelligence (AI) which include significant measures that will affect both users and developers worldwide. The 10 take-away points include that new, expanded risk-based regulation is imminent and might affect the various groups involved in the lifecycle of AI systems. The White Paper raises several questions, including in relation to global compliance issues such as export controls. Stakeholders can provide their comments on the White paper by May 31, 2020.
